24 INTRODUCTION

25 The central question in this case is a question of law. The Historic Lot Exception allows 26 development of a substandard lot only if the lot “was established as a separate building site in 27 the public records of the county or City prior to July 24, 1957, by deed, platting, or building
28

1 permit.”¹ This case will call upon the Hearing Examiner to decide what it means to “establish” a
2 separate building site. We argue that to “establish” a fact like the existence of a separate building
3 site requires firm, definite proof that the fact is true, not vague supposition or ambiguous
4 evidence. The Department of Construction and Inspections (“The Department”) has proffered a 5 building permit from 1930 in an attempt to establish a separate building site in this case, but we 6 believe this building permit is insufficiently clear to satisfy the high standard demanded by the 7 word “establish.” Accordingly, we believe that the Historic Lot Exception does not apply to the 8 lot in this case. We ask the Hearing Examiner to overturn the Department’s finding.
9

10 In addition, we believe the Department acted arbitrarily and capriciously in ignoring 11 contrary evidence and deciding this case differently from past cases. We ask the Hearing
12 Examiner to overturn the Department’s finding on these grounds, as well.
13

14 This case will also call upon the Hearing Examiner to decide matters relating to the 15 payment of the code interpretation fee and the fee for its defense. Argument for these matters
16 appears after argument relating to the matters surrounding the separate building site.
17

18 FACTS

19 Mr. Clifford Low, the developer in this case, petitioned the Department to find a Historic 20 Lot Exception for one of his newly acquired properties located at 3038 39th Ave. SW. The 21 property consists of a single lot that the developer purchased in 2015. On the southern half of the 22 lot is a house. The northern half of the lot is undeveloped and dominated by a large, old-growth
23 ponderosa pine. The northern half of the lot is just under 3,200 square feet in area, so it would

1 only be developable if an exception to the SF 5000 zoning in this neighborhood could be found.²

2 The developer asked the Department to find a Historic Lot Exception for the northern half of the 3 lot.

4 The original 1906 plat for this area of Seattle demonstrates that an early Seattle developer
5 divided land along what is now 39th Avenue SW into platted lots 25 feet wide and 95 feet long.³

6
7 In 1913, four of these platted lots, Lots 13–16, came into the hands of one Coulthard (“the 1930

20
21 On July 19, 1930, Coulthard obtained a building permit to construct a house on the 22 southernmost portion of the lot. The building permit described the lot as all of Lot 16 (the southernmost lot) and the southern 8 1/3' of Lot 15.⁵ The 1930 building permit was silent as to what was to be done with the northern portions of the property.⁶ That house still stands today at 3038 39th Ave SW. It is currently owned by Mr. Low. Its porch and retaining wall encroach across the line of the 1930 building permit. See Figure 2, below:

On December 12, 1930, Coulthard conveyed by deed to Arkell all of Lot 13 (the northernmost lot) and 8 1/3' of Lot 14.⁷ Arkell built a house there. That house still stands today at 3030 38th Ave SW. That house is not directly involved in this dispute. See Figure 3, below:

⁷ See Plaintiff's Exhibit C, "See Legal Site Building Letter Package," at 2.

Coulthard, the 1930 owner, was left holding the property highlighted in green below in Figure 4. He conveyed that property to Rose in 1931 as a single lot. The property then changed hands at least 10 times over the decades until now, each time being bought and sold as a single lot, with no further development taking place. Today, Mr. Low owns the lot in green:

Figure 4: The lot in green has been sold at least 10 times over 85 years as a single lot.

1
2 On the basis of these facts, and upon request from Mr. Low, the Department issued a
3 preliminary finding of a Historic Lot Exception for the northern half of Mr. Low's lot (the area
4 between the blue lines of the green-shaded lot) on January 5, 2016.⁸ The Department finalized
5 that finding in its MUP of October 6, 2016;⁹ and re-affirmed that finding in response to 6 Appellant's appeals in the Department's code interpretation of December 9, 2016.¹⁰
7

9 ARGUMENT

10 ISSUE 1: THE DEPARTMENT MUST "ESTABLISH" A SEPARATE
11 BUILDING SITE ON THE NORTHERN HALF OF THE PROPERTY
12

13 The Historic Lot Exception allows development of a substandard lot only if the lot "was 14 established as a separate building site in the public records of the county or City prior to July 15 24, 1957, by deed, platting, or building permit."¹¹

16 In order to qualify for the Historic Lot Exception, a separate building site in the northern 17 half of the property must be "established" in the public records. The term "establish" is not 18 defined in the ordinance. As a question of law, the Hearing Examiner must decide what it means
19 for a separate building site to be "established." We believe that a separate building site cannot be 20 called "established" until any doubt as to its existence has been cleared up by unequivocal
21 evidence in a deed, plat, or building permit. If a deed, plat, or building permit merely hints at the

1 existence of a separate building site without confirming its existence firmly and explicitly, then
2 the building site is not “established” as required by the law of the Historic Lot Exception.

3 According to Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014), “establish” means more than 4 merely indicate. It means “to settle, make, or fix firmly; or to prove; to convince.”

5 Other courts have been called upon to explicate the word “establish” as it appears in 6 various laws. These other courts have found that to “establish” a fact means to provide
7 compelling evidence that the fact is true. Merely hinting at the existence of a fact is not enough
8 to “establish” the fact. There must be a thoroughgoing examination of the totality of the 9 circumstances before a fact becomes “established.”
10

11 The following three cases from the US Supreme Court and the state courts of Tennessee
12 and Kansas illustrate that when a law calls for a fact to be “established,” the fact is not 13 established until there is more than a mere scintilla of evidence in its favor. None of these cases
14 constitute binding precedent in Washington regarding the meaning of the word “establish.”
15 Nonetheless, we urge the Hearing Examiner to adopt these courts’ common-sense interpretation 16 that “establish” means to firmly settle, not merely hint at.
17

19 A. Three Cases on the Meaning of “Establish”

20 The meaning of the word “establish” was the crux of the US Supreme Court case Mullins
21 Coal Co. v. Dep’t of Labor, 484 U.S. 135 (1987). In that case, a statute provided that coal miners
22 were presumptively entitled to compensation for black lung if they could produce as evidence a
23 chest X-ray that “established” the presence of pneumoconiosis in the lungs.¹² The issue in the 24 case was whether a single chest X-ray indicating pneumoconiosis was sufficient evidence to 25 “establish” the presumption of pneumoconiosis. There were additional X-rays that neither 26
27

28 ¹² 484 U.S. at 141.

1 indicated nor contraindicated the disease; only the single positive X-ray pointed to the presence
2 of the disease.

3 The Court held that the single positive X-ray was not sufficient evidence to “establish”
4 the presence of the disease. The Court acknowledged that the single positive X-ray that indicated
5 the disease did “constitute evidence” of the disease, but because a single X-ray is subject to 6 multiple possible interpretations, the single X-ray by itself could not “establish” the disease.¹³
7

8 “Thus, it seems perfectly clear that it is not the X-ray in isolation that ‘establishes’ the 9 presence of the disease; rather, the regulation must, at a minimum, have reference both to the X-
10 ray itself and to other evidence that sheds light on the meaning and significance of the X-ray.
11 Just as the ALJ must weigh conflicting interpretations of the same X-ray in order to determine 12 whether it tends to prove or disprove the existence of pneumoconiosis, there would seem to be 13 no reason why he must ignore all X-rays in a series except one.”¹⁴
14

15 In the 1901 Tennessee case of Endowment Rank of Order of K.P. v. Steele (63 S.W.
16 1126), the Supreme Court of Tennessee was confronted with the question of how much evidence 17 was needed to “establish” that an insured individual had committed suicide. The court held: “The 18 meaning of the word ‘establish,’ as applied to the quantum of evidence, is to settle certainly or 19 fix permanently what was before uncertain, doubtful, or disputed.”¹⁵ The court stated explicitly 20 that to “establish” a fact means to prove it by more than a preponderance of evidence. The court
21 criticized a particular jury instruction that demanded that the suicide had to be “established.” The 22 court’s critique was that the law in this case demanded only the lower “preponderance” quantum
23

26 ¹³ Id. at 147.

27 ¹⁴ Id. at 147–148.

28 ¹⁵ 63 S.W. at 1128.

1 of evidence that made a fact more likely to be true than not. To instruct the jury that the law
2 required the fact to be “established” was an error, because “established” facts call for more
3 evidence than mere “preponderance” facts. Demanding that the jury “establish” a suicide was 4 instructing the jury to be more certain of the facts than the law in this case required.

5 Likewise, in the case of Kansas v. Bryles, 261 P.3d 979 (2011), the Kansas Court of 6 Appeals held that “establish” means to prove or settle. The court ruled that the production of 7 court records showing defendant’s previous out-of-state DUI convictions was sufficient evidence
8 to definitively prove that the defendant had a history of DUI, and the fact was therefore 9 “established” conclusively.
10

11 All three of these cases show courts grappling with what it takes to “establish” an answer 12 to a factual proposition: whether a miner has black lung, whether a man committed suicide, or 13 whether a drunk driver has a history of drunk driving. In all three cases, the courts insisted on 14 seeing clear, unequivocal evidence before they would consider a proposition to be established. A 15 proposition is not established merely by making a prima facie case. It is only established once 16 any doubt as to its veracity has been dispelled.
17

19 B. The Meaning of “Establish” in This Case

20 In the same way that the single X-ray in Mullins Coal Co. hinted but did not prove that 21 the miner may have had a lung problem, the 1930 building permit in this case hints but does not 22 prove that the 1930 owner may have been contemplating some future activity on the northern 23 half of the property. But just as the single chest X-ray was not capable of establishing by itself 24 that black lung had set in, the 1930 building permit is not capable of establishing by itself that an 25 additional building site was created on the northern half. Hinting at a proposition is not the same 26 thing as establishing the proposition, and the 1930 building permit merely hints.
27
28

1 In Mullins Coal Co., if the plaintiff had produced a series of conclusive and indisputable
2 X-rays, he would have established the presence of black lung. The single, vague chest X-ray he
3 was able to produce was not enough. Likewise, in this case, if the Department could produce a 4 building permit that addresses the northern half of the property, that would conclusively and 5 indisputably establish the existence of a separate building site on the northern half. Instead, the 6 Department has produced a building permit for the southern half of the property that does not
7 discuss the northern half of the property at all. Under the reasoning of Mullins Coal Co., the US
8 Supreme Court would have no difficulty finding that the Department has failed to establish a 9 separate building site on the northern half of the property.
10

11 The law of the Historic Lot Exception is not that a separate building site must be 12 conceivable or permissible or ambiguously hinted at. The law is that a separate building site must 13 be established. As illustrated by Mullins Coal Co., Endowment Rank of Order, and Bryles, to 14 establish a separate building site means to carry a heavy burden of proof. The Department does 15 not establish a separate building site by demonstrating that a separate building site was merely 16 conceivable, or that a separate building site was not disallowed, or that one possible reading of 17 the evidence is that the 1930 owner may have contemplated a separate building site. None of 18 these showings are adequate under the law. Instead, the Department must show that a separate 19 building site on the northern half was firmly, unequivocally, explicitly fixed. Only then will the 20 separate building site be established.
21

24 C. The Department May Use Only the 1930 Building Permit
25 to Find Evidence for a Separate Building Site in the Northern Half

26 As it attempts to firmly, unequivocally establish a separate building site, the Department
27 is restricted as to the types of evidence it may consider. Under the law of the Historic Lot
28

1 Exception, only plats, deeds, and building permits are permissible evidence for establishing a
2 separate building site. In the past, other types of records, including tax records, were permissible
3 evidence, but the law was amended specifically to exclude these other types of evidence,¹⁶
4 leaving only the three types aforementioned.

5 The Department concedes that no plat or deed establishes a separate building site in this
6 case.¹⁷ In fact, the deeds in this case tend to indicate that there is no separate building site, 7 because the 10 transfers of the property from 1930 to today all treat the property as a single
8 building site, not two separate sites. That leaves the Department only the 1930 building permit
9 with which to find a Historic Lot Exception. The Department's case must stand or fall on 10 whether the building permit for the southern half has established a building site on the northern 11 half, because the permit is the Department's sole remaining permissible type of evidence.
12

14 The Department and the developer have proffered sewer permits and sewer cards in their 15 list of exhibits to establish a separate building site. Under the law of the Historic Lot Exception,
16 it is impermissible to consider those records, because they are not deeds, plats, or building
17 permits. They are irrelevant to this case and should be excluded.¹⁸ If the Department cannot 18 establish a separate building site using only the 1930 building permit, then it cannot establish a 19 separate building site.
20

21 D. The 1930 Building Permit Does Not by Itself "Establish"

22 a Separate Building Site in the Northern Half

23
25
26
27 ¹⁶ See "Appellant Parriott's Brief on Decision Type," filed November 10, 2016, at 4-6.

28 ¹⁷ See Plaintiff's Exhibit A, "Legal Building Site Letter," at 2.

¹⁸ See Hearing Examiner Rule 2.17(b) ("The Examiner may exclude evidence that is irrelevant.")

1 As argued above, the law requires both that any evidence for a separate building site must 2 firmly and unequivocally establish the site, and that the 1930 building permit must be used as the 3 sole line of evidence. Therefore, for the proposed Historic Lot in this case to survive, the 1930
4 building permit must stand on its own to firmly and unequivocally establish a separate building
5 site in the northern half of the property. As will be shown below, the 1930 building permit does 6 not stand on its own to firmly and unequivocally establish a separate building site.
7

8 The 1930 building permit is a building permit for the southern half of the property, not
9 the northern half. The permit contains a description of the lot for the house to be built at 3038
10 39th Ave SW, the house that still stands today on the southern half of the property. The permit
11 describes the lot for this southern house as “All of Lot 16 and the south 8 1/3 feet of lot 15,”¹⁹
12 which means the southern half of the lot. The permit is utterly silent about the fate of the 13 remaining northern half of the lot.
14

15 The Department’s code interpretation reads much into this silence, and uses the silence to 16 find a separate building site. According to the Department’s Conclusion #3: “[The owners] could 17 just as easily have included Parcel B [meaning the northern half of the lot]...in the site
18 description. However, a portion of the property was consciously and deliberately omitted from 19 the site description. By calling out only Parcel A [meaning the southern half of the lot], the 20 owners effectively carved off the remainder of the property. The only logical reason for doing 21 this was to preserve that remainder for separate development.”²⁰
22

24 Each and every sentence in this Conclusion #3 is unsupported by evidence. It is not true 25 that the 1930 owner could “just as easily” have included the northern half in his description of 26

27 ¹⁹ See the 1930 Building Permit in Plaintiff’s Exhibit C, “Legal Building Site Letter Package,” at 7.

28 ²⁰ See Plaintiff’s Exhibit R, “SDCI Code Interpretation No. 16-006,” at 3.

1 the lot for the southern house. If the owner had intended to install some other feature on the 2 northern half, such as a chicken coop, greenhouse, gazebo, detached garage, swimming pool, or 3 any such similar structure, it would make perfect sense that he would leave off mention of the 4 northern half when describing the space to taken up by the southern house. It would not be “just 5 as easy” for him to lump in the northern half with the southern half if he was interested in 6 pursuing any kind of future construction.
7

8 He may also have wanted to pay taxes on a smaller buildable lot, maintaining a large,
9 non-buildable side-yard next to the southern house in order to keep his taxes down. In fact, tax
10 records reveal that this is precisely what previous owners of the lot have been doing for decades:
11 paying taxes on a small house with a yard next to it, not a house with a lucrative building site
12 next to it.²¹ It is error for the Department to say without evidence that the 1930 owner could “just 13 as easily” have written his permit application differently, when doing so might have raised his 14 taxes.

16 The Department further errs in saying the northern half was “consciously and deliberately 17 omitted.” The Department states in the first sentence of Conclusion #3 that it will not attempt to 18 “determine the subjective intent of the [1930 owner].”²² Having committed itself not to analyze 19 the owner’s intent, the Department cannot then turn around and make declarations about the 20 owner’s conscious state of mind and supposedly deliberate course of action, especially without 21 any evidence of that state of mind. No one can say in 2016 whether the 1930 owner’s actions
22
25

26 ²¹ See Plaintiff’s Exhibit F, “King County Parcel Viewer Sales History for tax parcel 3009800070,” at 2.
27

28 ²² See Plaintiff’s Exhibit R, “SDCI Code Interpretation No. 16-006,” at 3. The assessed tax value of the property is commensurate with a single house, not a house plus the option to build another house.

1 were part of some larger, “conscious and deliberate” scheme. The evidence of the permit is too
2 scanty to support any such inference.

3 Further, the 1930 owner did not “effectively carve off the northern half” of the property,
4 as the Department erroneously claims. In fact, he retained ownership of the northern half, failed
5 to build any house on it, and then sold it together with the southern half as a single lot shortly
6 after constructing the southern house. The 1930 owner’s actions do not indicate two lots; they 7 indicate one lot. In fact, through at least 10 changes in ownership, every subsequent owner has 8 bought and sold this lot as a single lot. The 1930 permit was not an “effective carving off,” 9 neither on its own terms nor in light of every owner’s subsequent actions.
10

11 Most erroneously, the Department says the “only logical reason” for the permit to 12 describe the southern half so narrowly was to build a second house on the northern half. This is 13 nonsense. There is not “only one logical reason” for writing a narrow permit; there are many.
14 Logical reasons for describing the southern half narrowly include the tax advantages of having a 15 smaller buildable lot and the possibility for constructing other features like the chicken coop,
16 greenhouses, and the like discussed above. The Department was asked during the public 17 comment period and in the plaintiff’s request for code interpretation to consider these other,
18 perfectly logical possibilities, but it declined to do so. In its code interpretation, the Department
19 simply declares by fiat that there had to be a house and nothing else on the northern half.
20

22 E. Conclusion Regarding the Question of “Establish”

23
24 In sum, the Department’s Conclusion #3 lacks substantial evidence for its claim that a
25 Historic Lot is “established” in the northern half of the property. There is simply not enough
26 evidence in the 1930 building permit to foreclose other possibilities for the northern half: a 27 smaller tax parcel to lower the tax burden; a future chicken coop or other such structure; or 28

1 simply a side-yard hosting a lovely tree, which has been the property's actual use for more than 2 eight decades and counting. On the evidence of the building permit itself, which again is the only 3 permissible line of evidence, any of these hypothetical outcomes is just as likely as the 4 hypothetical construction of a house. Nothing regarding a separate building site on the northern 5 portion of the property has actually been "established" in the 1930 building permit. The permit is 6 silent on this question. The Department's attempts to read additional facts and intentions into the 7 1930 building permit are erroneous, illogical, and irrelevant. The 1930 building permit simply 8 cannot sustain the burden demanded of it: to firmly and unequivocally establish a separate 9 building site on the northern half of the property.
10

11 ISSUE 2: THE DEPARTMENT ARBITRARILY DISREGARDED EVIDENCE
12 AGAINST A SEPARATE BUILDING SITE IN THE NORTHERN HALF
13

14 The 1930 building permit fails to answer the question of what fate was intended for the 15 northern half of the property. That alone is enough to doom the Department's finding of a 16 separate building site. But in addition to failing to establish its finding, the Department has also 17 arbitrarily ignored contrary evidence and acted capriciously in deciding this case differently from 18 past cases.
19

20 The Department's reasoning underlying its Historic Lot Exception decision is subject to 21 reversal if it was arbitrary and capricious. Arbitrary and capricious is the well-established 22 standard of judicial review for the reasoning of agencies, even agencies not subject to the state's
23 Administrative Procedure Act ("APA").²³
24

26 ²³ See, e.g., Saldin Securities, Inc. v. Snohomish Cty., 134 Wn.2d 288, 294 (1998) ("We have consistently held that 27 any arbitrary and capricious action is subject to [judicial] review, never indicating that additional extraordinary 28 circumstances must exist").

1 “Arbitrary and capricious has a well-established meaning in this state. It refers to willful
2 and unreasoning action, taken without regard to or consideration of the facts and circumstances
3 surrounding the action. Where there is room for two opinions, an action taken after due 4 consideration is not arbitrary and capricious, even though a reviewing court may believe it to be 5 erroneous.”²⁴

6
7 “Due consideration of all the facts and circumstances” requires a weighing of all relevant
8 information, including any contradictory information that would tend to cut against the agency’s
9 final decision. The mere existence of contradictory information does not render an agency
10 decision arbitrary and capricious, but the contradictory information must still be considered.
11 Failure to consider the contradictory information renders the agency decision arbitrary and 12 capricious.²⁵

13 14 A. The Department Arbitrarily Ignored Contrary Evidence

15 All of the following contrary evidence was provided to the Department prior to the 16 issuance of its code interpretation, but the Department makes no mention of it in its 17 interpretation:
18

19 1. Tax records for the property show that the northern and southern halves of the property
20 have been treated for tax purposes as a single lot up until 2015, when the developer purchased
21 them and segregated them.²⁶ If there really were two lots for the intervening 85 years, as the 22 Department claims, the owners should have been taxes accordingly. The property cannot be one
23

24 ²⁴ Abbenhaus v. Yakima, 89 Wn.2d 855, 858–859 (1978) (discussing the arbitrary and capricious standard of review
25 as applied in non-APA, quasi-judicial proceedings like the Seattle Hearing Examiner).

26 ²⁵ See, e.g., Squaxin Island Tribe v. Wash. State Dept. of Ecology, 177 Wn. App. 734, 742–743 (2013) (agencies 27 must weigh all the factors bearing on their decisions).

28 ²⁶ See Plaintiff’s Exhibit E, “King County Parcel Viewer Property Report for tax parcel 3009800071.”

1 lot when it is convenient for tax purposes and then two lots when it is convenient for 2 development purposes. If the 1930 building permit had spoken so clearly to the city and the 3 county as the Department claims it does, it should have decades ago created two lots as two tax
4 parcels. The reason it did not create two tax parcels is because it did not create two lots.

5 2. For 86 years, and through numerous changes of ownership, no homeowner until now
6 has tried to build a house on this site. If this proposed building site was ever intended to be a nest
7 egg, it should have been hatched long before now. In fact, an enormous old-growth ponderosa
8 pine has grown up on the northern half of the property during its decades as a side-yard. The 9 failure to build is an indicator that the northern half is not an established building site in the 10 minds of the people who knew the property best: its former owners.

11 3. The selling price of the house in 2015 was $505,000, which is typical for a small single 12 family home in West Seattle.²⁷ $505,000 is much too low a price for a house plus a buildable lot
13 for a second house. It is a much more reasonable price for a single house on a single lot.

14 4. The Historic Lot Exception ordinance identifies deeds as one of the three possible
15 ways to find a Historic Lot Exception. As the Department itself acknowledges, the deeds in this 16 case show the transfer of the lot as a single property over and over again for a period of 86 years.
17 These numerous deeds seem to indicate the existence of a single lot. The Department does not 18 explain why its one, unsubstantiated, permit-based inference of two lots should outweigh the 19 much more numerous, much more substantial, deed-based inference of a single lot. It is 20 unreasonable to allow one “silent permit” to override numerous explicit deeds. In light of the 21 unbroken chain of deeds showing one lot, the inference from the 1930 building permit of two 22 lots is not a reasonable inference.

²⁷ See Plaintiff’s Exhibit F, “King County Parcel Viewer Sales History for tax parcel 3009800070.”

1 5. A porch extends across the line between the northern and southern halves of the 2 property. A permanent, concrete retaining wall also extends across the line.²⁸ These features are
3 indications that the 1930 property owner regarded the lot as a single lot, not two lots. If there
4 were two separate lots, the owner would have been putting his porch and the retaining wall of his 5 house into the possession of another person. It is unreasonable to think he would have done so.

6
7 By failing to consider this contrary evidence while finding the Historic Lot Exception, the 8 Department acted arbitrarily and in violation of the law as articulated in Saldin Securities,
9 Abbenhaus, and Squaxin Island Tribe. Its finding must be overturned.

10 B. The Department Capriciously Decided This Case Differently Than Others

11 In addition to ignoring contrary evidence, the Department has behaved capriciously in its 12 reasoning. When considering previous proposed Historic Lots, the Department has found that a 13 building permit for one portion of a property does not create a separate building site on a 14 different portion of the property. This is the opposite of its finding in the current case. The 15 Department should have decided this case in the same manner as in the past, and found that there
16 is no Historic Lot in this case.
17

19 On June 19, 2015, Department staffer David Graves, a member of the Department's team
20 in this case, issued a Legal Building Site Letter to one Thor Sunde.²⁹ Mr. Sunde had requested a 21 finding of a Historic Lot Exception under circumstances very similar to the ones in this case: He 22 had a property spanning three platted lots. Building permits for two houses had been issued, and 23 those houses spanned two of the three plats but not the third one. The third, leftover plat was 24 empty. Later, a deed incorporated a portion of the third, empty plat into one of the built-upon lots
25

26
27 ²⁸ See Plaintiff's Exhibit K, "Property Sketch by Lisa Parriott."

28 ²⁹ See Plaintiff's Exhibit L, "Thor Sunde Legal Building Site Letter."

1 on one of the other plats. A small rump section of the third, empty plat was excluded from this 2 deed. This rump section was also excluded from any of the surrounding building permits. At the 3 end of all the transactions, the rump section stood alone—no deed, no building permit, no
4 incorporation onto other lots. No documentation at all spoke directly to the rump section of the 5 lot, just like no documentation speaks directly to the northern half of the lot in our current case.
6 The deeds and building permits in Mr. Sunde’s case spoke only to the lots surrounding the rump
7 section, just like the 1930 building permit speaks only to the southern half of the lot in our 8 current case.
9

10 In his Legal Building Site Letter, Mr. Graves informed Mr. Sunde that the rump section
11 was not a separate building site, even though all the lots around it had been peeled off by deeds
12 and building permits. The reason the rump section was not an “established” separate building site 13 was because no deed or building permit specifically and explicitly defined it as a separate 14 building site. In Mr. Graves’s words: “While the available permit records suggest that Lot 19
15 was not included in the development site of either of the adjacent residences, there are no permits
16 that describe Lot 19 or the South 30 feet of Lot 19 as a separate building site. Therefore, the 17 South 30 feet of Lot 19 is not established by permit as a separate building site.”
18

20 The reasoning Mr. Graves employed in the Thor Sunde matter is that a building permit
21 only establishes a separate building site if it explicitly says so. Building permits that strip away 22 surrounding lots one by one—leaving one final, unspoken-for patch of ground—do not establish 23 a separate building site, because they do not speak explicitly to the existence of a separate 24 building site. The Thor Sunde building permits were for adjacent portions of the property, not for 25 the portion of the property Mr. Sunde proposed as a separate building site. In the absence of a 26 building permit for that portion, the Department found there could be no separate building site.
27
28

1 The Department's reasoning in the Thor Sunde matter is logically sound and fully
2 compliant with the law of the Historic Lot Exception. It is capricious of the Department to reject
3 that reasoning without explanation in the current case. It is especially capricious of the 4 Department to abandon the previous approach that was sound and evidence-based in favor of a
5 new approach that is unsound and unsubstantiated by evidence.

6
7 It is a fundamental tenant of administrative law that agencies may not capriciously
8 disregard their own precedent by deciding analogous cases in opposite ways without any 9 explanation for the change.³⁰ Because the Department has done so in this case, its finding of the 10 Historic Lot Exception must be overturned.

11 ISSUE 3: THE DEPARTMENT MUST REFUND

12 THE CODE INTERPRETATION FEE

13
14 In her request for a code interpretation, Appellant requested a refund of the $2,800 code
15 fee. She pointed out that these fixed costs lack a rational justification, are disproportionate, and 16 function to limit her access to the court system, all in violation of the precedent set in Housing
17 Authority of King Cty. v. Saylor, 87 Wn.2d 732 (1976). The Department's code interpretation
18 does not address this complaint, and no refund has been forthcoming.

19
20 Unlike the typical requestor of a code interpretation, usually a person or entity who seeks 21 regulatory assurance prior to requesting a permit for a development project, Appellant seeks this 22 code interpretation only because she must: It is a required "exhaustion of administrative

28

³⁰ See, e.g., Lemoyne-Owen College v. NLRB, 357 F.3d 55, 59–60 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (holding that agencies may not capriciously alter course from case to case, because such conduct destroys "predictability and intelligibility.")

1 remedies” step in the Hearing Examiner appeals process.³¹ Thus, the Code Interpretation in this
2 case operates on Appellant as a required fee for obtaining access to a court of law.

3 Access to courts is a constitutional right in Washington and required fees to access courts
4 must have a rational justification under the rule set by the Washington Supreme Court in 5 Housing Authority of King Cty. v. Saylor:

6 “As the United States Supreme Court said in Ortwein v. Schwab...the rational 7 justification test is met if the fee is not disproportionate and provides some revenue to assist in 8 offsetting operating costs.”³²

9 Requiring the $2,800 fee in this case fails both prongs of the Saylor test. The fee is 10 disproportionate and it does not assist in offsetting the Department’s operating costs.

11 The fee is disproportionate as an access-to-court fee. Below is a sampling of fees to file a 12 matter in a court of law or to obtain administrative review in Washington:

13 i) The Seattle Hearing Examiner requires only an $85 fee. SMC 3.02.125(A).

14 ii) Appeals from a court of limited jurisdiction require a $230 fee. RCW
15 36.18.020(2, 5).

16 iii) Filing at a Washington State Superior Court requires a $240 fee. RCW
17 36.18.020(2, 5).

18 iv) Appeals to the Washington State Court of Appeals require a $290 fee. RCW 19 36.18.018(2, 4).

20 v) Appeals to the Washington State Supreme Court require a $290 fee. Id.

21
22
23
24
25
26
27 ³¹ See SMC 23.88.020(A).

28 ³² 87 Wn.2d at 739 (citing Ortwein v. Schwab, 410 U.S. 656 (1973) (emphasis added)).

1 vi) Filing a case in the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Washington
2 requires a $400 fee. 28 U.S.C. § 1914.

3 vii) Appeals to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit require a $505
4 fee. 28 U.S.C. § 1913.

5 viii) Appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States require a $300 fee. Sup. Ct.
6 Rule 38(a).
7

8 The $2,800 fee required by the Department as part of the judicial review process is 9 grossly out of proportion to any of the fees listed above, especially considering that $2,800 is a
10 minimum fee that could go up later. Unlike the owner of property who seeks clarification of a
11 potential project, Appellant simply seeks administrative and, if necessary, judicial review of a
12 project the City has effectively already approved, and for which the City has already invested 13 substantial resources in concluding that the separate building site had been “established” by 14 building permit. The Department’s code interpretation gives developers firm legal ground to 15 stand on as they plan their projects, so the fee is reasonable for them. But all the fee does for 16 Appellant is needlessly drive up the cost of Hearing Examiner or judicial review. It would be 17 cheaper to file an appeal in all eight jurisdictions listed above simultaneously than it is to file an 18 appeal of this MUP. The fee is disproportionate to the service, making it unjustifiable under the 19 first prong of Saylor.
20

22 In addition, the fee in this case is not justifiable as an offsetting of the Department’s costs
23 in this case, thus failing the second prong of Saylor as well. Prior to issuing the MUP and the 24 code interpretation, the Department had already conducted a thorough search of the property’s
25 history and of the municipal code. The work normally funded by Appellant’s $2,800 code
26 interpretation fee had already been done. The code interpretation in this case was nothing more 27
28

1 than a restatement of the Department's earlier efforts. The Department incurred no new costs the 2 fee could be used to offset.

3 Because the fee is disproportionate and does not offset costs, the fee unconstitutionally
4 restricts Appellant's access to the courts, in violation of both the State Constitution and LUPA,
5 both of which grant citizens reasonable access to the courts. See Saylor; RCW 36.70C.030.

6 The Department has waived code interpretation fees in the past, most notably for the 7 "Shell No" protests. Department staffer David Graves wrote in a July 18, 2016 email to one of 8 the Friends of the Silent Giant that the Director does have the power to waive the cost of code
9 interpretation, but he said the Director only does so in cases that receive "national attention."
10

11 The "national attention" standard is wholly undocumented anywhere in the land use code
12 or the Department's published procedures. It is arbitrary and capricious to extend fee waivers to 13 groups based on unpublished and seemingly ad hoc rationales. Appellant has gained local 14 attention in the media for this story, there is significant concern citywide with the use of Historic 15 Lot Exceptions to bypass the building code, and she and the public deserve to have this issue
16 heard without undue fees.
17

19 ISSUE 4: THE DEPARTMENT MUST WAIVE AND REFUND ITS COSTS OF 20 DEFENDING THE CODE INTERPRETATION BEFORE THE HEARING EXAMINER

21 The normal rule under the land use code is that the requestor of a city service incurs the 22 cost of preparing for defending that service at the Hearing Examiner at a rate of $280 per hour.
23 See SMC 22.900C.010(A). This includes the requirement that the requestor of a MUP will bear
24 the cost of that permit if it is appealed to the Hearing Examiner.
25

26 Here, as reflected by the Legal Building Site Letter and the issuance of the MUP, the 27 Department had already made up its mind on the Historic Lot Exception prior to writing its code
28

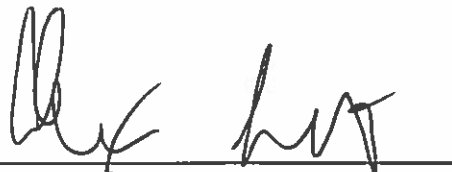

1 interpretation. When Appellant sought to appeal the Department's decision, she was forced by
2 law to seek a code interpretation, but she is not really appealing the code interpretation; the code
3 interpretation merely serves as the exhaustion requirement for her appeal of the Department's 4 original decision to find a Historic Lot. The developer is the ultimate requestor of the city's 5 services, not Appellant. Appellant only appears to be a requestor of services because she was 6 told repeatedly by the Department that the only way to appeal the Department's decision is to 7 request a code interpretation. The actual service at issue is the granting of the MUP and the 8 finding of the Historic Lot Exception.
9

10 Because the developer was the actual requestor of city services, the developer is required
11 to bear the costs of defending those services before the Hearing Examiner under SMC
12 22.900C.010(A). The Department must refund any defense fees assessed against Appellant and 13 must waive any further fees against her.
